DEATH OF GEN. DOUGLAS.

Gen. Henry Kyd Douglas, a member of Stonewall Jackson's original staff and one of the best-known lawyers and residents of Western Maryland, died at 8 o'clock last night at his home, on Potomac avenue, Hagerstown. His condition had been critical since early yesterday morning. He passed away surrounded by the members of his away surrounded by the members of his family. Several years ago the health of General Douglas became impaired, and in the hope of recuperating he made frequent trips North and South. Each month he grew worse, and the latter part of the past summer his condition became such that he was unable to leave the house, and, in fact, spent much of his time in bed. Specialists were consulted, but they were unable to give him any relief, his trouble apparently being a general breaking down of his health. General Donglas was born in Shep-

General Donglas was born in Shep-herdstown, W. Va., in 1840. He was educated at Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pa., and at Lexington, Va., where he was graduated in law.
At the breaking out of the war between At the breaking out of the war between the States he enlisted in the Stonewall Brigade as a private, and was gradually promoted until he reached the rank of colonel, and was adjutant general of the brigade. He was afterwards but the staff of Stonewall Jacksov, in which position he remained until the death of that general. He served in succession on the staffs of Generals Early Gordon and Johnston. At erals Early, Gordon and Johnston. At the close of the war he was in command of the Light Brigade, formerly com-manded by Generals Hill and Early. While in command of the Light Brigade he was promoted to the rank of brigadier general, but his commission did not reach him. He was in every battle fought by the Stonewall Brigade, and achieved a high reputation as a brave and skillful soldier. At the battle of Gettysburg he was severely wounded. He also received injuries in four other engagements. The distance between Jackson and Ewell was 103 miles. There was no railread, no telegraph facilities and no mail. The road lay on ground that was rough and winding. Jackson imparted to him the nature of the message he was to convey. He also when Douglas put his feet in the stirrups and turned his horse's head in the direction of Brandy station. In making the journey the courier rode five horses. The ride of that night was not soon forgotten by the man who made it. It was black over and all around, and the rain fell in sluices. The road was either thick with rolling stones or knee deep in mud. The horses either stumbled or stuck. The circuitous route lay around Massanutta Mountain and through the somber Blue ing. Harrisonburg, It was about surrise when he pulled his foam-covered horse to a "whoa" in front of the quarters of Ewell. The old soldier was always an early riser. He was up and out when the courier from Stone wall Jackson saluted him and delivered his message. Ewell asked Douglas when he left Jackson's headquarters. Hearing the answer the blunt old soldier, but still mindful of his bringing up, said: "If it were not that you look like a rentleman, sir, I would say you are a-liar, sir." that was storm-soaked and black. The following day he sent for Donglas, and in very fervent words he promoted him to the place of assistant inspector general on his staff. After the war he practiced law two years in Win-chester, Va., and then came to Ha-gerstown, Md., where he had since lived. In 1875 he was the democratic candidate of Washington county for the State Senate and ran 900 votes ahead of the State ticket, but the whole ticket, with the exception of Louis C. Smith, who was made speaker of the House of Delegates, was defeated. He made a gallant cam-paign some 15 years ago for Congress in CAKES the Sixth Maryland district, but was defected by Mr. McComas. In March, 1891, Governor Jackson appointed him associate judge of the Fourth judicial district in place of Judge A. K. Syester, deceased. He was nominated by the democratic convention for the full term, but was defeated by the republican candidate, the late Edward Stake. In 1892 General Douglas was appointed adjutant general of Maryland by Governor Brown. General Douglas never married, nor did his friends believe he ever would. Many his friends believe he ever would. Many years ago he was engaged to a beautiful and wealthy southern lady, who, upon the eve of embarking from a European port for home, having gone to Paris for her trousseau, was taken suddenly ill and died. General Douglas was a dignified gentleman, kind and affable to all who came in contact with him. He was
